EXPRESS SAFE ROBBED. Mexican Courier Took $42,000 From

Wells-Fargo Company. A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune from Mexico City says: The fact that the Wells-Fargo Express Company was robbed of $42,000 at Silao last Thursday has come to Peculiar circumstances attended the robbery. A small safe is usually carried from the through Mexican Central train to the office and thence to the Guanajuato train by a courier. On the morning of the robbery the express messenger warned the men to be careful of the safe, telling him it contained a large sum of money. Instead of taking the safe to the office the courier took it to his home, called in a number of his friends and opened it. The money was extracted and distributed. Following the discovery of the robbery at Silao about forty persons were arrested and all, except about $11,000, recovered.

M. JUSSERAND'S VIEW

ADDRESS AT DEDICATORY EXER-CISES AT ST. LOUIS.

Spanish Minister Also Spoke of the Territory This Country Acquired From Spain.

A dispatch from St. Louis yesterday afteroon says: The dedication ceremonies of yesterday were so prolonged that it was 2 o'clock in the morning before thousands of people were able to reach their homes. As a consequence they were somewhat tardy in coming up for the round of the second day's festivities. The exposition grounds had a deserted appearance compared with the throng of yesterday-and there was at 11 o'clock, an hour before the time set for the opening of the ceremonies of the second day, about two soldiers to be seen for every civilian that had put in an appearance.

It was made painfully evident yesterday that greatly increased transportation facilities from the city to the exposition must be provided if the fair is to be successful. Two hours after the conclusion of the program of last night thousands of people were unable to secure a foothold on the densely crowded cars, and so many were the delays that the run from the exposition grounds to the city, usually done in forty minutes, required four times that long. What street car lines there are good enough—the trouble is that they are too few in number.

Yesterday Was International Day. On the official program today was designated as "International day," it being set aside for the dedication of the foreign buildings. The members of the diplomatic corps, representatives of foreign governments and other official guests assembled at the St. Louis Club at 10:30 a. m. and were driven from there to the exposition grounds. Although the hour set for the commencement of the day exercises was 12 o'clock it was much later when the assem-bly was called to order by Corwin H. Spen-made the opening address. Mr. Spencer then introduced President Francis of the exposition, who extended the Address by French Minister.

After the rendition of a selection by the Marine Band of Washington the French Mr. Jusserand said, in part: When the treaty, signed in Paris 100 years ago, and by which the area of the United States was to be more than doubled, stood for rati-fication before Congress, there were, contrary to what we might suppose, protracted discussions and objections of many sorts. Some thought that the title to the new acquisition was not a sufficient one; others were anxious on account of the very mag-nitude of the new territories, and expressed the fear that the federal tie would be loosened if extended to such remote and partly unknown regions. Many were th criticisms and long the speeches.

Senator Jackson of Georgia rose, and, turning toward one of the hostile party, said: "In a century, sir, we shall be well populated * * * and instead of the description given of it by the honorable gentleman, instead of a howling wilderness, where no civilized foot shall ever tread, it we could return at the proper period, we should find it the seat of science and civilization.

Senator Jackson's time has come the very year he named; one century has just elapsed since he spoke. If he could return among us he would see no howling wilderness, but one of the most brilliant gather-ings which this country has ever beheld, including the chief of the state and a former chief of the state, representatives of all the powers of the globe, soldiers and sailors, priests, magistrates, savants, artists, tradesmen and agriculturists, workmen and citizens innumerable, all bent upon consecrating by their presence and doing homage to the work done during the hundred years. Good work, indeed; nay, stupendous. Sanguine as he was, Senator Jackson could, 1 think, scarcely believe his eyes and ears if he saw the matchless sight we presently behold, and the preparation for the im-pending exhibition of all the produce, all the discoveries, all the art of the wide earth. He would scarcely believe his ears if he heard that we came in twenty-seven hours from the place where he had delivered his prophecy, and which had become only two years before the seat of govern-ment. No less great would be his surprise if he learnt that the supposed "howling wilderness" had been turned into an im-mense garden dotted with wealthy towns; that all the land called in his days Louis-iana produces yearly now one million and a half bushels of various sorts of grain and that the private belongings of the successors of the scattered settlers of his time are valued in ours at $3,000,000.

But he would not be surprised if he learned that the federal tie has not been loosened; that the number of states has increased their wealth, too; the number of their inhabitants; their importance in every re-spect, and that they consider as more and more sacred the bond which unites them tothe older part of the community. Such are the effects of liberty and just laws.

The French Pioneers.

In this triumphal day, amid the shouts of joy, the reports of the guns and ringing of the bells, considering the splendid results, it is only natural that we carry our look backward to the past and have a thought for the lonely pioneers of long ago, who came, one by one, to this then unknown land, and tried, among incredible difficul-ties, to make it less unknown, to make it more productive and easier to reclaim for you, their distant inheritors. No one, I am sure, will think it amiss that I, a compatriot of theirs, and a representative of their country, recall at this day their efforts and express today's gratitude for yesterday's work. For they were hardy men, those children of distant France; they were plucky, enterprising and courterly were plucky, enterprising and courterly stated that the state of th they were plucky, enterprising and courageous; they led strenuous lives indeed; all qualities for which you ever had a special regard. To say that they did not fear danger is to slander them; they loved it. danger is to slander them; they loved it.
Soldiers, missionaries, governors of cities, explorers, came year after year, from the time of Louis XIV, attracted by the chances or the beauty of the unknown, the opportunity of increasing their country's dominions, or of becoming famous, or of instructing souls, and of dying, if death was to be met, bravely and honorably. Very French they were, with all the qualities of their race, and something else perhaps, some of them, than the qualities. As they went them, than the qualities. As they went down the great rivers from the regions of the Canadian lakes to the Mexican sea they gave them French names, and the reading gave them French names, and the reading of a map of that epoch strongly reminds one of the century of the sun king. There he is, with all his court, figured in lands, cities, lakes and rivers. Louisiana bears his name, Lake Ponchartrain the name of his minister for marine, Fort Duquesne the name of his famous saflor. There were also the rivers Colbert and Seigneley, better known nowadays as Mississippi and Illinois. One of the great lakes had been named after the Duke of Orleans; another of the great Conde, the winner of Rocroy; another after his brother, Prince de Conti; but this last inland sea, as indeed most of the others, soon resumed its Indian name, the homely name of Lake Erie, the Lake of the Cat.

Long is the roll and great were the pardships. To the same region, with the same that typical Cadet de Gascogne, the Chevalier Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac, who on the 21st of July, 1701, unfuried the French flag at a certain spot where he began the building of a town, now the town of Detroit. He became afterward governor of Tissenet, as the brothers Le Moine d'Her-ville and Le Moine de Bienville, this last the founder of New Orleans; as Fatner de Charlevoix, who gave the best account we have of the country and spoke most wisely about its future; as La Clede, worthier than any one to be remembered at this day and this place, as he was the founder of your town. Years went on; the dark shadows and splendid rays of light with which French history is interwoven shone and vanished in their grand and awful alternance. One day the French flag was lowered in Louisiana; that was at the close of the seven years' war. Another day the same flag was seen on the mast of a small vessel leaving the harbor at Bordeaux and sailing for America. The ship happened to bear the auspicious name of "La Victoire," bear the auspicious name of "La Victoire," and it bore Lafayette. Then it was the alliance of 1778, and the coming, in the same year, of the first envoy accredited by any nation to this country, my predecessor, Gerard de Rayneval, a stanch friend of America; then the peace of 1783, when, with the assent of the whole world, to the inv of every French heart, thirteen store." joy of every French heart, thirteen stars shone on the American flag.

shone on the American flag.

France recovered then neither Louislana nor Canada, nor anything. But she had never intended it. She won a friend, and such a friend is better than any province. She was happy, having exactly fulfilled, without change, bargain or extenuation, the task she had mapped out for herself in 1778, when she declared in the alliance treaty that the "direct and essential object of the same was efficaciously to maintain the freedom, sovereignty and absolute and illimited independence of the United States." The joy was such in Paris at the States." The joy was such in Paris at the news of American independence that per-formances in the theaters were interrupted; the great event was announced, and au-diences rose to their feet to cheer the new-born republic. Festivities were given, and dences rose to their teet to cheer the newborn republic. Festivities were given, and colored prints were scattered all over France for the benefit of those who could not be present. Such souvenirs were proudly kept in families. One such came to the remote house of my own parents in the mountains, and it was carefully preserved, and I possess it at this day.

France followed her destinies. In 1800
Louisiana was French again; three years later, on the spontaneous proposal of the French republic, not New Trieans alone, not a mere strip of land out the whole country, became forever American.

The treaty signed one hundred years and a day ago had little precedents in history;
it dealt with territories larger than the empire of Alexander, it followed no war; it was preceded by no shedding of human blood; the new possessors got a hundred times more than they even thought of demanding.

The Words of Bonaparte. "I know the worth of what I give up," said Bonaparte; and the French government knew it indeed. They acted with open eyes, for they had taken care, from the tions has not and never was darkened by the rankling memories which war and international strife always leave in their they enlightened themselves had been asked of Louis Vilemont, former captain in the regiment of Louisiana. It is still unpublished: and it informed the government that "from various reports of Canadian and Indian hunters it is possible to walk from the Missouri to the sea in less than two months and a half." An access to the Pacific was not so easy as now, but yet an access was therefore practicable, and the wealth of the country was extraordinary. Warming at the souvenir of what he knew, waith of the country was extraordinary. Warming at the souvenir of what he knew all parts. At each step made from east to west all produce, all things increase tenfold. It seems as if nature had made this corner of the globe the most favored one of her imported in the seems as if nature had made this corner of the globe the most favored one of her imported by where else. The men born there look more men of the tribes who worship Manitou."

Seeing the results, my countrymen have year of 1800 to gather all available infor-their place among the greatest powers of the world, 1803 did nothing but perfect what the world, 1803 did nothing out perfect what had been gloriously begun in 1778 and 1783. Following the "Hallelujah Chorus" from the "Messiah," which was given by the band, the Spanish minister, Senor Don emilio de Ojedo, spoke for Spain. Speech of the Spanish Minister.

He said: Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: I deeply regret by inability to respond to the very flattering recognition of the part played by Spain in the early history of this territory. I wish I were endowed with the same eloquence displayed by previous orators which it has been our privilege to listen to and admire. Still had not the national glories of Spain been so brilliantly alluded to, were I able to recall them now, with colors as glowing as the warmth their memory brings to my Spanish heart, I feel I could not raise to them a loftier or more eloquent monument than has been raised by these immortal works of Washington Irving, Prescott, Lowell and Ticknor, which have made Spanish tradition a femiliar a household spanish tradition a familiar, a household, patrimony of

I am sure you will agree with me in thinking I could do no better, that I could not pay a higher nor more honorable nor lasting tribute to our share in the history of this continent and of this country, than by invoking the testimony of your own literary glories, and by referring now to the by invoking the testimony of your own literary glories, and by referring now to that grateful recognition which moved the founders of this republic to associate the revered memory of Isabella, the soulstirring deeds of Pizarro Cortez and Ojeda with the temple of your nationality.

If ever the engrossing consciousness of your wonderful actual prosperity, the intensity of your life, made one of your strenuous citizens forget what your present owes to our past, let him ascend the steps in your national Capitol, let him pause before its majestic gates, and there he will behold, carved in bronze on the threshold of your proudest monument. proudest monument the effigies and the names of these Spanish heroes who discovered, conquered and pointed to you the way into the path you have so successfully fol-
